Cassie Garrett grew up in the small town of Metamora, Indiana. She is married to her husband Nate, and they have two young daughters, Sophie and Savannah. It was while living in Nebraska that Cassie volunteered to participate in her first mission trip to Costa Rica.

This journey became a turning point in the author's life. She felt as if God had sent her to Costa Rica to send her home. Cassie felt a stirring in her heart to write a book, as well as a true calling to leave her corporate job and return home to open a family-run business, which would become her family's ministry. Hoping their restaurant would cultivate an environment in which customers could be loved and leave feeling both full and happy, Cassie desires to be a disciple of Jesus--not only serving Him first but also serving her family, her friends, her community, and her newly-found friends.

Cassie describes herself in one word: "human". In her spare time, the author wrote this book about her day-to-day life with Jesus, sharing just how human she really is.
